

THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF DEMOCRATIC TRANSITIONS

Stephan Haggard and Robert R. Kaufman

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY PRESS PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY

Contents

List of Figures and Tables	ix
Preface and Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction
The Political Economy of Democratic Transitions	3
PART ONE: THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF AUTHORITARIAN WITHDRAWALS	23
Chapter One
The Political Economy of Authoritarian Withdrawals	25
Chapter Two
Economic Crisis and Authoritarian Withdrawal	00
Chapter Three
Surviving Crises, Withdrawing in Good Times	00
Chapter Four
Comparing Authoritarian Withdrawals	00
PART TWO: THE POLITICAL ECONOMY OF ADJUSTMENT IN NEW DEMOCRACIES	00
Chapter Five
Democratic Transitions and Economic Reform	00
Chapter Six
New Democracies and Economic Crisis	00
Chapter Seven
Economic Management in Non-crisis Democracies	00
Chapter Eight
Economic and Political Reform in Dominant-Party Systems: Mexico and Taiwan	00
PART THREE: THE CONSOLIDATION OF DEMOCRACY AND ECONOMIC REFORM	00
Chapter Nine
Economic Reform and Democratic Consolidation	00

viii CONTENTS

Chapter Ten
Institutions, Democratic Consolidation, and Sustainable Growth	00
Conclusion
Comparing Democratic Transitions	00
Index	00

Figures and Tables

FIGURES

1.1	The Political Economy of Authoritarian Withdrawals	37
5.1	Fragmentation and Polarization in New Democracies	00
5.2	The Political Economy of Adjustment in New Democracies	00

TABLES

1.1	Economic Performance prior to Democratic Transitions	34
2.1	Economic Trends prior to Authoritarian Withdrawal: The Crisis Cases	00
2.2	Strike Activity during Transitions	00
2.3	Popular-Sector Mobilization	00
3.1	Economic Crisis and Adjustment in Chile, 1979–1985	00
3.2	Economic Crisis and Adjustment in Korea, 1978–1983	00
3.3	Economic Trends and Authoritarian Withdrawal: The Non-crisis Cases	00
4.1	Military Expenditure before and after Democratic Transitions	00
4.2	Party Alignments in New Democracies	00
4.3	Elections and Party Alignments in New Democracies	00
5.1	Economic Performance in New Democracies	00
6.1	Post-transition Economic Developments in Bolivia	00
6.2	Post-transition Economic Developments in Peru	00
6.3	Post-transition Economic Developments in Argentina	00
6.4	Post-transition Economic Developments in Brazil	00
6.5	Hyperinflation and Government Finances in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, and Peru	00
6.6	Changes in Class and Industrial Structure in Latin America	00
6.7	Post-transition Economic Developments in Uruguay	00
6.8	Post-transition Economic Developments in the Philippines	00
7.1	Post-transition Economic Developments in Korea	00
7.2	Economic Developments in Thailand, 1983–1992	00
7.3	Post-transition Economic Developments in Turkey	00
7.4	Post-Transition Economic Developments in Chile	00
8.1	Economic Developments in Mexico, 1980–1992	00
8.2	Economic Developments in Taiwan, 1980–1992	00

X LIST OF FIGURES AND TABLES

8.3	Kuomintang Share of Votes and Seats in Elections to Legislative Bodies, Taiwan, 1977–1993	00
8.4	PRI Election Results, 1970–1994	00
9.1	Poverty and Income Distribution in the 1980s	00
9.2	Survival Rates for Democratic Regimes, 1960–1990	00
9.3	Death Toll and Economic Performance in Peru, 1980–1991	00
9.4	Attitudes toward Democracy	00
9.5	Attitudes toward Democracy and Government Performance: Bolivia, Colombia, Peru, and Ecuador	00
10.1	Types of Democratic Systems and Economic Performance, 1986–1990	00

Preface and Acknowledgments

This book has had a long gestation. We first met at a series of workshops organized by Miles Kahler at the Lehrman Institute in the fall of 1984 that led to his volume on The Politics of International Debt (Cornell University Press, 1985). In late May 1985, we met again at a conference on the political economy of stabilization sponsored by the Yale Center for International and Area Studies and the Institute for Social and Policy Studies and organized by Colin Bradford.

That meeting initiated a long and fruitful collaboration among us and a group of close colleagues and friends: Thomas Callaghy, Miles Kahler, Joan Nelson, and Barbara Stallings. That collaboration, funded generously by the Ford and Rockefeller Foundations, produced Fragile Coalitions (Transaction Books for the Overseas Development Council, 1989) and Economic Crisis and Policy Choice (Princeton University Press, 1990), both edited by Joan Nelson. Our first written collaboration was a contribution to a project on developing country debt directed by Jeffrey Sachs for the National Bureau of Economic Research. Surviving the experience reasonably well, we went on to edit The Politics of Economic Adjustment (Princeton University Press, 1992). In addition to essays by Kahler, Stallings, and Nelson, we were fortunate to work with John Waterbury and Peter Evans on that project.

Still not tired of one another's intellectual company, we began to discuss a more extended study on the political economy of democratic transitions. Work on the project began during leaves in 1991 and 1992 funded by individual research and writing grants from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation. We are grateful to the foundation for providing the resources that allowed us to make significant headway in initiating this project.

During part of this period, Haggard and Steven B. Webb from the World Bank co-directed a collective research project on economic adjustment in new democracies, to which Kaufman contributed a study of Mexico. The results of this project were published as Voting for Reform: Economic Adjustment in New Democracies (Oxford University Press, 1994), co-edited by Haggard and Webb. Steve Webb deserves special thanks, as does the excellent team of scholars that contributed to our understanding of Poland, Chile, Senegal, Nigeria, Thailand, Turkey, and Spain. Tony Dunn at the Council on Foreign Relations and Johannes Linn at the World Bank helped Haggard to obtain the Foreign Relations International Affairs Fellowship which funded his work at the World Bank; Vittorio Corbo, director of the Macroeconomics and Growth Division at the time, was kind enough to invite a political scientist into his division. Kaufman would like to thank his co-authors on the Mexico portion of the project, Carlos Bazdresch and Blanca Heredia, for their valuable collaboration as well as for the general education they provided about that complex political system.

xii PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Kaufman spent his leave during 1991 and 1992 at the Institute for Latin American and Iberian Studies at Columbia University. He would like to thank Douglas A. Chalmers, the director, assistant directors Marc Chernik and Katie Roberts Hite, and other members of the staff for welcoming him to the Institute and providing a supportive and stimulating environment in which to work. In July 1994, he worked on final revisions of the manuscript as a scholar-in-residence at the Bellagio Study and Conference Center of the Rockefeller Foundation.

During the time that this manuscript evolved, Haggard also had the pleasure of working on three other projects that assisted his thinking on these issues. Robert Dohner collaborated in a study on the politics of adjustment in the Philippines, part of a larger project on the political feasibility of adjustment organized by Christian Morrisson of the OECD Development Centre. Haggard was also able to interview a number of Korean policymakers and scholars in connection with a joint research project on Korean macroeconomic policy sponsored by the Harvard Institute for International Development (HIID) and the Korean Development Institute (KDI). Susan Collins, Richard Cooper, Chungsoo Kim, Ban Ho Koo, David Lindauer, Dwight Perkins and Sung-tae Ro collaborated in that project. Haggard also co-authored the conclusion to John Williamson's study on The Political Economy of Policy Reform (Institute for International Economics, 1993), a project that brought together a number of policymakers and scholars involved in particular reform episodes. Haggard's move to the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies at the University of California, San Diego, in 1992 provided him a stimulating new home in which to finish this project; teaching a course with Susan Shirk and Matthew Shugart on institutions was particularly instructive.

Kaufman benefited from his collaborative work with Barbara Stallings, which resulted in a co-edited book, Debt and Democracy in Latin America (Westview Press, 1989), and a study of the role of political parties, published in The Macroeconomics of Populism (MIT Press, 1991), edited by Rudiger Dornbusch and Sebastian Edwards. His understanding of the politics of democratic transitions has also been advanced through collaboration on the project on Economic Liberalization and Democratic Consolidation, directed by Laurence Whitehead and sponsored by the Social Science Research Council. Comments on a paper presented at the University of Bologna, Forli, Italy, in Spring 1992, were particularly helpful. He would also like to acknowledge the help of Eric Hershberg, staff director for the SSRC.

PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS xiii

A number of individuals read the manuscript in draft form and have given us both criticism and encouragement. Luiz Carlos Bresser Pereira, Katrina Burgess, Tom Callaghy, Douglas Chalmers, T. J. Cheng, David Collier, Jorge Dominguez, Kent Eaton, Geoffrey Garrett, Barbara Geddes, Peter Gourevitch, Carol Graham, Howard Handleman, Peter Katzenstein, Sylvia Maxfield, Marcilio Marques Moreira, Molly O'Neal, Adam Przeworski, Garry Rodan, Matthew Shugart, Eduardo Silva, Van Whiting, Eliza Willis, and Carol Wise read the entire manuscript and offered extensive comments. Other individuals read portions of the manuscript and provided us with insights on particular issues and countries or assisted us in other ways. Our thanks to Lisa Anderson, Henri Barkey, Peter Beck, Kiren Chaudhry, Scott Christensen, Yun-han Chu, Ruth Collier, Larry Diamond, Rick Doner, Jeff Frieden, Martin Garguilo, Eric Hershberg, Kevin Hewison, Paul Hutchcroft, Ted James, Jan Kubik, Joohee Lee, Barbara Lewis, Arend Lijphart, Chung-in Moon, Manuel Montes, Joan Nelson, Daniel Nielson, Greg Noble, Ziya Öni, Süleyman Özmucur, Leigh Payne, Shelley Rigger, Hector Schamis, Michael Shafer, Denise Stanley, Evelyne Huber Stephens, Nick van de Walle, John Waterbury, and Ed Winckler. Edwin Chan, Michelle Chang, William Clark, Michael Cripps, Enrique Delamonica, and Daniel Nielsen provided us with research assistance.

Parts of this manuscript have been presented before colloquia and seminars where we received extensive comments and criticism. We would like to thank the following individuals and institutions: Jon Fox of the Political Science Department at MIT; Paul Boeker and Colleen Morton of the Institute of the Americas, La Jolla; David Trubek and Jeff Cason of the Global Studies Research Program and the MacArthur Scholars Workshop at the University of Wisconsin, Madison; Thomas Biersteker, Dietrich Rueschemeyer, and Hector Schamis of the Watson Institute, Brown University; Colin Bradford of the Development Centre of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, Paris; Leslie Armijo, Thomas Biersteker, and Abraham Lowenthal, organizers of the workshop on political and economic liberalization at the University of Southern California; Jonathan Hartlyn, Evelyne Huber Stephens, and John Stephens of the University of North Carolina; members of the Political Economy Seminar, Rutgers University; Peter Evans and Jim Rauch, co-chairs of a working group on ideas, institutions, and economic growth; Larry Diamond and Marc Plattner of the Journal of Democracy; and Peter Berger and Robert Hefner of the Institute for the Study of Economic Culture.

Spouses always receive expressions of thanks, whatever their actual role in the completion of research projects. In this case, though, Nancy Gilson and Laura Schoen genuinely deserve gratitude, having suffered patiently not only through this book, but through our earlier collaborations as well. Nancy and Laura carried a double burden: not only did each provide support and encouragement for her husband, but each had to put up with the intrusions of his co-author as well. So far, remarkably enough, marriages and friendships have survived very well, despite long and expensive phone conversations, frequent absences for conferences and consultations, sleepless nights, and mood swings.

xiv PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Finally, this book is dedicated to our children, Lissa and Matthew Kaufman and Kit Haggard: the next generation of democrats and the one after that.

August 1994